

1 World hunger

We see a world around us in which the world's resources are very unevenly distributed and a large number of people are living in extreme poverty.

We are striving for a world where material resources are fairly distributed and the basic needs of all people are satisfied.

2 Discrimination against and persecution of women

We see a world around us marked with massive gender inequality, ranging from the structural discrimination against women in many areas of life to widespread, often sexualized violence against women.

We are striving for a world where women and men have access to the same economic opportunities, work is fairly divided between the sexes, and women are not at risk of becoming victims of violence.

3 Destruction of the natural resources that sustain life

We see a world around us where the world's natural resources are being wasted and destroyed.

We are striving for a world where they are used only to the extent that makes ecological sense.

4 Commercialization of all areas of life

We see a world around us where people are increasingly focused exclusively on gainful employment and consumption.

We are striving for a world where social interaction is central and people are free to develop all of their abilities, interests, and needs.

5 Fraudulent claims of democracy

We see a world around us where many societies claim to be democratic, but which in fact are often the opposite, ruled covertly with corruption by undemocratic elites.

We are striving for a world where fundamental democratic principles apply not only to the political, but also to all areas of society.

6 Media dominance

We see a world around us where interpersonal communication is dominated by products of a powerful industry with its own agenda for our attention.

We are striving for a world where everyone has the opportunity to express and disseminate their opinions freely.

7 War as a means to achieve political objectives

We see a world around us where war is repeatedly used to achieve political objectives. A massive military industrial complex benefits from the consumption of armaments.

We are striving for a world where the use of weapons and warfare are despised and non-violent means of resolving conflicts are used instead.
